

Craig C. Callewart, M.D., FAAOS

FACE OF

SPINE SURGERY

BRET REDMAN

“GREAT RESULTS.” “VERY PLEASED.” “WONDERFUL.”

“Truly caring.” These are some of the ways patients describe Dr. Craig Callewart in his online reviews. A board-certified, fellowship-trained orthopedic spinal surgeon, he practices in north central Dallas. During the past 25 years, over 30,000 patients have trusted him for specialized, individual care that includes more than 7,000 spinal surgeries. He co-founded Baylor University’s first spine center, while treating over 2,000 spinal fractures at Dallas’ busiest trauma center during the start of his career.

This extensive experience allows him to bring seasoned judgment to the treatment of neck and back problems, from pinched nerves to herniated discs to complex deformities. Not all painful conditions can be helped by surgery or need surgery, which is why most patients don’t receive surgical treatment. His most satisfying case is the challenging problem that received multiple treatments elsewhere, but now is improved with different care.

Easy to access, the primary office is on Central Expressway

(75) just north of Northwest Highway (Loop 12) with free parking. The medical office building has supporting medical specialists, CT, MRI, and in-office X-ray.

In addition to direct patient care, Dr. Callewart works directly with members of U.S. Congress and the Texas State Legislature to advocate for the doctor-patient relationship and patient access to quality care. In fact, he was gifted a state Senate gavel for last year’s service. U.S. congressman, state senators, and state representatives receive their care from him. Additionally, he strongly believes in a faith-based approach to treatment of suffering for those who wish to engage.

Named a Best Doctor in D Magazine multiple times, his educational background began at St. Mark’s school of Texas in Dallas, followed by Texas A&M University, UT Southwestern Medical School, Case Western University, and UCLA School of Medicine.
